THE SECOND WAR OF INDEPENDENCE

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

They were on the move along Main Street – a path that hadn't been opened through the forest until 1808 – but it was now 1812 and it was reported that the first ten horse team passed through Richfield drawing a large cannon on its way from Albany to Buffalo. Many more teams would pass through town transporting munitions of war headed for the men on the Niagara frontier.

In September of that year, Captain Levi Beardsley called out his militia to drill in Monticello. Later they were drafted into service for the War of 1812, often called the 'Second War of Independence'. It was the first large scale test of the new American republic and the first time there was a declaration of war on a foreign nation.

On June 18, 1812, President James Madison had signed the official declaration of war against Great Britain. This was the result of the conflict between Great Britain and France when the British tried to restrict trade between America and France. Added to this, the British needed more men to serve in their troops and used the method of impressment -capturing U.S. ships and kidnapping the sailors, forcing them into service for Great Britain. This was often referred to as the 'press gang'. They also were blamed for inspiring Natives to fight against the U. S. citizens who were trying to settle around the Great Lakes.

One of the first battles proved a defeat for America when Tecumseh, a Shawnee leader who had organized a confederation of North American tribes to resist encroachment on the lands by European settlers, allied with a small British militia and forced Americans to surrender Detroit in August 1812. America won the Battle of Lake Erie in September 1813, insuring America's control of the lake. This was the first time that African Americans were officially allowed to join the U. S. Navy with over one-quarter of the sailors during the Battle of Lake Erie being African American. In August of 1814, the British won the Battle of Bladensburg and took control of Washington D.C., burning some of the Capitol and White House. The President and government had been evacuated to Maryland and a rainstorm prevented total destruction from the fire. American forces had a key victory on September 11, 1814 at the Battle of Lake Champlain which saved New York from British invasion.

War then moved to the south and the use of the British Navy when the Battle of Baltimore began the next day, lasting for several days as British ships bombarded Ft. McHenry. Aboard one of the British ships was a lawyer and poet, Francis Scott Key, who was inspired when he saw the American flag still flying over the fort, to pen what was to become our National Anthem, The Star-Spangled Banner.

Fighting moved south when U. S. forces led by Andrew Jackson won a decisive victory at the Battle of New Orleans on January 1815. This, however, was fought after the U. S. and Great Britain had signed the Treaty of Ghent, ending the war on December 24, 1814. The treaty resulted in things returning to the way they were before the war – a state of Statue Quo Ante Bellum.

This conflict was fought during the Industrial Revolution and many improvements to life in the U.S. were a result, things we have come to honor as a part of our country's history. Historians may not remember all of the battle of the war, but they most likely remember the USS Constitution – lovingly nick-named Old Ironsides. This was one of six original frigates authorized by the Navel Act of 1794, launched in 1797. The name was one of ten that were submitted to then President George Washington for his choosing. The frigate was designed to be larger and more heavily armed (44 guns) than others of that time. During the War of 1812, the crew was responsible for capturing five warships. It was retired from active service in 1881, later designated as a museum ship in 1907 and is still famous today at the Charlestown Navy Yard in Massachusetts to promote understanding of the Navy's role in war and peace.

At the start of the War of 1812, men were mobilized quickly. Barracks and supply depots were hastily set up, and contracts were issued for food, uniforms, and equipment. One contract went to Samuel Wilson, a meat packer in Troy, New York, who soon shipped barrels of pork and beef to nearby camps. Local recruits who knew Wilson said the "U.S." stamped on the barrels stood for "Uncle Sam" Wilson. The legend spread quickly, and cartoonists developed the familiar image of a tall, thin man wearing red-and-white striped trousers, a blue coat decorated with stars, and a stovepipe hat. Over the years, Uncle Sam has endured as a symbol of America's patriotic spirit.

Those listed by Henry A. Ward in his 'Annals of Richfield' as serving in the War of 1812 were: Ira Allen, Waterman Ames, Joseph Beardsley, Darius Cary, Samuel Colwell, Wm. Deuel, Sanford Deuel, Aaron Dow, Calvin Eaton, Garrison Filkins, Oliver Griffin, Ivory Holland Jr., Jeremiah Meacham and Joseph Norton.

While both the United States and Canada would return to the status as it existed before the conflict, both sides in their own way could claim victory. Great Britain retained its hold on Canada and her maritime rights and the United States vindicated its sovereignty and earned the respect of Europe.

Know Your Limits

Maybe you like the feel of the open road or maybe you're just in a hurry. But the fact remains, that speed limits are carefully set to give you the safest possible driving speed for each road's particular traffic conditions. And because speeding is dangerous, the penalties are stiff.

So whenever time is of the essence, start out early and obey your local speed signs. Then you can enjoy a safe and leisurely ride without having to worry about the fines.
