Historian Harriett Geywits*

Music was always an important part of life for the residents as well as visitors to this area. Any number of events featuring bands, orchestras, special concerts, and vocal entertainments of all kinds were presented, sometimes daily, for all occasions. These brought well-known performers as well as local talent together for the enjoyment of others.

An article appearing in the June 1889 issue of The Richfield News (a summer weekly publication) was taken very seriously by residents who wished to advance their musical knowledge. It was written by Louis Lombard, resident at the time of the Utica area and founder and director of the Utica Conservatory of Music. Because of his proximity to Richfield and his association with well-placed citizens of both areas, Lombard was often the conductor of the hotel orchestra which provided entertainment for the summer visitors here. He explained why the study of the violin was so important for ladies to engage in. (Note: Lombard became a well-known violin soloist at a young age.)

"For the relief of the young man who is frequently entertained (?) at family gatherings, I would like to point out to young women the desirability of playing some instrument other than their irrepressible pianoforte - were it only for the sake of novelty.

Much or little, every girl plays the piano. The young lady who cannot wade through at least two-thirds of a Beethoven Sonata is, indeed, a rarity. Equally rare would be the man who would not admit that he has often been bored by the universal accomplishment of piano playing.

The soothing effect upon the ear produced by even a mediocre violinist after the gyrations of three or four Liszts in petticoats, is sufficient reason why girls should have another 'bow' on their strings.

In musical culture, the study of the violin is of prime importance. Careful practice upon a string instrument refines the ear and trains the organ to a nice perception of tone and intonation.

A violin can always be tuned perfectly and at a moment's notice. This, as we all know, cannot be said of the piano. The violin can be carried by the player anywhere, thereby saving the inconvenience of performing upon an unfamiliar instrument. Furthermore, a good violin can be secured for less money than a bad piano usually costs.

A violinist of average attainments can touch the hearts of listeners, while it requires a Chopin or a Liszt to produce a similar impression with the cold and ungrateful pianoforte. The violin, comparatively to the pianoforte, lends itself with ease to the production of pathetic effects.

The position of the violin player is more graceful than that of the pianist. I can hardly conceive anything more charming to the eye and the ear than a beautiful woman playing well on the violin.

Punctilious mothers should dismiss doubts as to the propriety of their daughter's playing the violin, for that instrument is already popular among women of the upper ten. Even princesses scrape through Kreutzer's studies, and I might say that Mrs. Cleveland is one of the recent additions to the long list of prominent women violin amateurs."

It may have taken a little while, but ladies of the area took 'note' of Mr. Lombard's words, and by November of 1900, a Ladies Orchestra was formally organized in our area. Monthly dues were fixed at fifteen cents and a fine of ten cents was imposed for each absence from practice. Their conductor was Professor Frank Thompson, director of the local band at that time. He also gave individual music lessons.

Members were practically all beginners on their respective instruments and it seemed a tremendous undertaking to gain a proficiency sufficient to appear in public as an organization. However, their faithful and constant practice soon showed excellent results and they made their first public appearance in December of 1900 for Christmas.

The group became part of the Richfield Springs Musical Association which included the Military Band of twenty members; the Young Band with thirty-two members; Ladies Orchestra of fifteen and the Drum Corps of twelve members.

In 1901 there was notice that the Ladies Orchestra had secured a fine upright piano direct from the factory of Newby & Evans of New York which they rented for a year with the privilege of buying, applying the rent as a first payment at the end of that time.

At that time, the membership included: Violins: (First) Miss Marjorie Hinds and Miss Carro B. Munger; (Second) Miss Thompson and Miss Greene. Flutes: (First) Miss Madeline Elwood; (Second) Miss Anita Bush; Cello: Miss Backus; Cornets: (First) Miss Christabel Greenman; (Second) Mrs. August Kinne; Trombone: Miss Crown; Bass Violin: Mrs. George W. Hyde; Piano: Miss Allan. Membership was by vote.

The group performed for commencements, plays, at Granges and balls at various hotels, as well as traveling to other locations for concerts. They often did benefits for other organizations such as the library. New suits were provided to the members in 1902 by Mr. E. M. Earle (owner of the Earlington Hotel). They were composed of Eton jackets (short jackets with collars and vests) in military blue and trimmed in gold braid with black skirts and white waists. Funds for new music were provided by plays put on under the auspices of the Ladies Orchestra among other activities such as special concerts.

Professor Thompson moved to Lowville in 1902 but came to Richfield about once every two weeks to drill the orchestra and assure their improvement.

The group existed into the 1930s providing excellent music for those who were fortunate enough to hear them. Their performances proved that they could, indeed, touch the hearts of their listeners.
