A BUSY TIME OF YEAR

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

The family is up extra early. The cows have been milked, the eggs gathered, all animals fed. As soon as the dew has dried of, a cloud of dust will appear on the road to the farm, indicating that the neighbors are on their way with horses and wagons to offer their help. It's fall and the time of year for threshing - a time for the labor-intensive work required to complete this task and a time for neighbor to help neighbor.

The art of gathering the grain by first cutting the stalks with a sickle and then piling them in 'shocks' to be taken to the barn where they would be beaten with 'flails' to make the seeds fall away from the straw, is an ancient process. This labor was relieved somewhat by the invention of the first type of threshing machine, circa 1786, to help separate the grain from the stalk. Many adaptations followed.

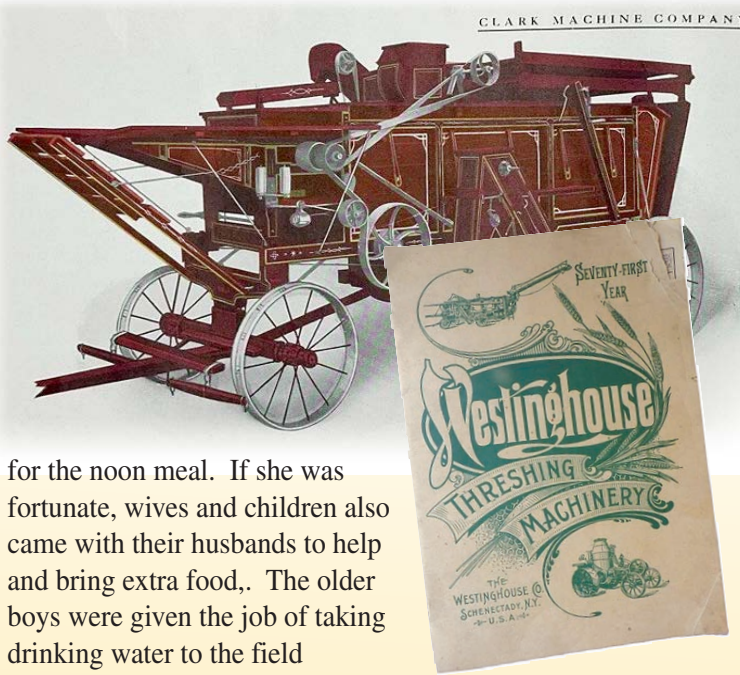

During the 19th century, threshers, reapers and reaper-binders gradually became widespread. The problem was that, for smaller farmers, the cost of owning such machinery was prohibitive. Neighbors often joined together to purchase one machine that would be used by all who owned a share - alternating from one year to the next which farmer would be the first to use the equipment.

Some local farm equipment dealers offered a thresher to rent out. "1892: The undersigned is prepared to do all kinds of threshing by steam on short notice - John Atkins, Richfield Springs." "1897: Attention Farmers: L. McCredy & Son have a new threshing machine with 3hp tread and will do threshing for 2 cents a bushel. The machine will be managed by Messrs. L. Wier and Eugene Carson. Also cutting and binding corn by the acre will be done." "1897: Farmers desiring a good job of threshing should employ D B Joslyn of Richfield Springs. He has a new Westinghouse machine and a 6hp engine capable of threshing from 100 to 1000 bushels per day with sufficient help. Grain, hay or straw will be taken in payment."

The manufacturing of farm equipment, including threshers, could be found fairly close by in Schenectady with the Westinghouse Works, started in 1840 by George Westinghouse Sr.; at St Johnsville Agricultural Works, started in 1867 which was later taken over by the Clark Machine Company; Reuben & Minard Harder Company, Cobleskill who, in 1869, produced threshers at the rate of three to four per week. While Cyrus McCormick, who summered in Richfield, did not have his manufacturing plant in this area, his farming equipment was available locally. Spelled 'threshing' and pronounced by most in the area 'thrashing', it was hot, sweaty work that took place three times a year if you were a farmer who raised rye, wheat and oats.

The machine was positioned and leveled at a convenient spot where there was room for the horses and wagons that brought the sheaves that were then pitched to one man on the thresher who cut the twine that was holding each one, passed them on to a second person who fed them into the machine where the grain was knocked from the stalks, separating the kernels, straw and chaff. The grain was bagged and placed in the grainery; the straw taken to the barn to be used as bedding for the animals. It was estimated that in 1850, using only hand methods, it took twenty-three hours per acre to bring in the crop. With the introduction of the threshing machine, it took eight hours per acre in 1900.

The neighborhood men weren't the only ones who helped during this season. The farmer's wife had been up early to get things ready for the noon meal. If she was fortunate, wives and children also came with their husbands to help and bring extra food,. The older boys were given the job of taking drinking water to the field workers. the younger children played outside under the watch of the older ones.

The dinner provided had to sustain the energy of the workers during their long day and had to be very plentiful. After all, it was a matter of pride for the wife to provide such a meal!

When the bell rang, it was time for the men to come in from the field. Horses were fed and watered first. If there weren't too many workers, they were fed in the kitchen - if too many to fit in comfortably, they were fed outside. The average number locally was from ten to twenty men. A washbasin, soap and towels for the crew to clean up were provided near the water pump. The 'outhouse' which had been cleaned, was a 'port of call' before sitting down to the meal.

Typically, the lady of the house would have roasted chicken, beef or ham, depending on what was available; whatever fresh vegetables were still in the garden; freshly baked biscuits and bread; gravy; canned vegetables made into favorite side dishes; pickles of all kinds including pickled beets and other relishes; applesauce; potatoes that were perhaps mashed or roasted and whole fruit, if available. The meal wouldn't be complete without serving a variety of pies such as apple, mincemeat, berry or sweet potato and coffee. Remember, all of this had to be prepared using a coal or wood stove, so planning was essential in order to have everything ready on time.

Before eating, the head of the household would offer a blessing including thanks for the workers and the crop they were harvesting. The women and children would have time to eat after the men had finished.

The crew usually took about an hour for their meal and would then head back to the field. About four or five o'clock, the workers would start back to their homes to do their own chores and to get ready to help the next neighbor with their threshing.

By the 1930s the use of machines called combines was introduced. This new agricultural technology joined the process of handling the grain by cutting and separating it all with one process. Combines working in the fields became a very familiar sight especially after World War II when the use of tractors became more popular. These mechanical advancement helped reduce the labor needed but also eliminated some of the neighborhood need to be ready to help others by working together. participate in walks, a ride around the lake on the steamer T R. Proctor, tennis and a new Scottish game called 'bowls' introduced on the lawn of the Spring House, not to mention attending the many concerts and other entertainments offered each day. Visitors found that their every need would be taken care of during their visit here.

Houseplant Tip

It's important to watch houseplants closely. According to gardenguides.com, an online gardening resource, you should inspect plants regularly for yellowing or discolored leaves. This condition is usually caused by overwatering, but can also be the result of insects. Deformed plants and sticky deposits on leaves and stems can be caused by insects as well.
